13 relations globally, and for purposes of investors, busi-

15 should be the policy of the United States Government to 16 respond strongly and persuasively to the growing number
17 of restrictions, threats, detentions, harassment, arrests, 18 pervasive surveillance, killings, and delays or denials of

10      section 101(a)(15)(I) during a fiscal year, the visa
11      shall be refused if any United States journalist or

3       or sought by, executives of a state-owned media or-4       ganization of a foreign state before the date of the 5       enactment of this Act in proportion to the expul-
6       sions, visa delays or denials, and intimidation experi-
7       enced by United States journalists or news organiza-
8       tion personnel in the course of working in the for-

6 SEC. 7. RESTRICTIONS ON THE FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

7 AND CENSORSHIP OF THE INTERNET TREAT-

8 ED AS A RESTRICTION ON TRADE.

9       (a) FINDING.—Congress finds that restrictions on 10 the activities of United States journalists and media per-11 sonnel and the censorship and blockage of websites and 12 the cross-border flow of information damages the competi-
13 tiveness of United States corporations and limits access
14 to information critical for investors, consumers, and others
15 making market and financial decisions and should be con-
16 sidered a restriction of trade and an unfair competitive
17 advantage benefitting foreign government-controlled news
18 organizations and other news and media corporations.

19           (b) STATEMENT OF POLICY.—Congress declares the 20 following:

21                   (1) The United States Government should seek 22                   as part of international treaty negotiations and in 23                   negotiations and bilateral discussions with China,
24                   Vietnam, Saudi Arabia, and other countries rated
25                   “Not Free” by Freedom House’s annual “Freedom

1       of the Press” survey, conditions for a free and unfet-
2       tered operation of websites, an end to visas restric-
3       tions for journalists, an end to harassment, intimi-
4       dation, and surveillance of foreign journalists and an 5       end to the abuse of state secrets laws, including Chi-6       na’s restrictions on the sharing of information be-7       tween Chinese and foreign journalists.

8                     (2) In addition, the United States Government 9       should seek to link expansion of the free flow of in-
10      formation with ongoing and future trade agree-
11      ments, and other bilateral agreements and commu-
12      niques, by seeking language eliminating any and all 13      limitations on market access for news agency serv-
14      ices and eliminate any restrictions on cross-border 15      data flows involving journalists and the media, in-16      cluding in the Trans-Pacific Partnership, Bilateral 17      Investment Treaties, or any other trade negotiations
18      planned or in progress and seek stipulations guaran-
19      teeing fair treatment of United States and other for-20      eign journalists and their publications, consistent
21      with the treatment received by foreign journalists
22      operating in the United States and free and unfet-
23      tered operation of websites in China and other coun-
24      tries where they are blocked or censored.

1       (c) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—In order to promote free-
2 dom of the press and recognize the importance of that 3 internationally recognized right to economic freedom and 4 economic security, it is the sense of Congress that—

5           (1) restrictions on journalists and media
6 websites and the censorship of the Internet are sig-
7 nificant foreign trade barriers;

8           (2) the United States Trade Representative
9 should include a list of United States websites
10 blocked in foreign countries in reporting on trade
11 barriers in its annual report on foreign trade bar-12 riers; and

13           (3) the United States Government should pur-
14 sue, at the World Trade Organization (WTO) , dis-
15 putes to end blockage of United States websites by 16 foreign governments, which would include require-
17 ments for other members of the WTO to regularly
18 publish a list of any banned or censored websites
19 and provide website owners an opportunity to ap-
20 peal.
